QUEENSFIELD COURT
Residents' Association

Your collective voice for Queensfield Court

QCRA is being built by the people who have an interest in Queensfield Court — including those who own a property here but do not live here.

If you are a landlord or other non-resident owner, you may experience Queensfield Court differently from residents who live here. But you still have an important interest in how the development is managed, maintained and funded. QCRA is intended to provide a constructive and organised way for owners and residents to share information, understand what is happening and, where appropriate, represent common interests collectively.

Why should landlords be involved?

The costs and quality of managing a property directly affect its ownership and investment value.

Issues can include:

- service charges and how they are calculated;
- the standard and value of maintenance and major works;
- management and administration;
- the condition and appearance of communal areas;
- long-running unresolved problems;
- communication and access to information; and
- the future maintenance and condition of the development.

These are matters that can be difficult to assess or influence when dealing with them individually.

A collective organisation gives owners an opportunity to share information, identify common concerns and make informed decisions about what should be raised with the landlord and managing agent.

A long-term association

QCRA is not being created around one particular issue or project.

We want to establish a lasting, independent and democratic association which develops according to the needs of its members.

We also intend to seek formal recognition as a Recognised Tenants' Association (RTA) under the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985. Recognition can provide qualifying members with important rights concerning matters such as information, service charges and consultation.

Most importantly, we want QCRA's future to be shaped by the people who have an interest in Queensfield Court.

Your interests matter

Being a landlord does not mean you need to attend every meeting or become involved in the day-to-day running of QCRA. You can contribute simply by:

- joining the Association;
- keeping informed about matters affecting Queensfield Court;
- sharing information or experience from other properties you own;
- raising concerns about management, maintenance or costs;
- attending meetings when an issue is relevant to you; or
- supporting particular projects or initiatives.

The more owners who participate, the better informed the Association can be about the interests of the wider Queensfield Court community.

What can QCRA provide?

QCRA aims to create a reliable channel through which information and concerns can be shared and considered collectively. For landlords, this can provide an opportunity to:

Understand what is happening at Queensfield Court and why decisions are being made.

Compare experiences, costs and standards with other properties and developments.

Question matters where information, costs or proposed works require further explanation.

Contribute your experience as a property owner to discussions about the future of the development.

Represent common concerns collectively rather than having every owner approach the managing agent independently.

Find out more

Visit qcra.org.uk to find out more about QCRA, read our Constitution and meeting information, and find out how to join.

Questions or want to get involved?

Email: join@qcra.org.uk

Or speak to one of the QCRA Committee members.

You can also scan the QR code to visit the website.